Downloads for 42 Always-Connected Plug Apple appears to be nearing completion of an acquisition of mobile payments firm Venmo, according to a new report from Recode. The reported deal would make Apple the preferred provider of mobile payments for mobile carriers and other financial institutions, Recode reports. The report cites "multiple sources familiar with the situation" who say that Apple is now finalizing the deal with the payments firm. Apple and Venmo didn't immediately respond to a request for comment. According to Recode, a deal could be announced as early as Monday, pending regulatory approval. Apple appears to be near finalizing an acquisition of San Francisco-based mobile payments firm Venmo, according to a report from Recode. The reported deal would make Apple the preferred provider of mobile payments for mobile carriers and other financial institutions. It's not clear how Apple would obtain regulatory approval for such a deal, since Apple's primary business is making and selling devices, not mobile payments. Recode cites "multiple sources familiar with the situation" who say that Apple is now finalizing the deal. Sources added that the final details are still being worked out, according to Recode, and that Apple could change its plan entirely prior to approval or could consider selling Venmo and other such services on its own. Apple and Venmo didn't immediately respond to a request for comment. Recode notes that the deal would give Apple more resources for pushing other services, including Apple Pay. Apple Pay, which was introduced in October 2014, currently allows consumers to pay for goods and services by simply showing a smartphone to a point-of-sale terminal or scanning a card. Venmo is a mobile app that allows people to send money or make payment requests to their friends, family and coworkers. While it's not the first of these kinds of apps to launch, it's one of the most popular, with nearly 50 million users. Venmo has grown at an increasingly steep rate, with annual revenue of around $285 million in its most recent quarter, according to Recode. The reported deal could be announced

You can use Windows Firewall with 3 different profiles: Internet, Private, and Default. The firewall settings in Manage Plus is similar to Windows Firewall, it enables you to control traffic that goes out or in through the network from the Internet to other computers on the network. Manage Plus allows you to chose to allow the firewall to control traffic from the Internet, and gives you a choice to allow personal or public computers on the network to talk to the Internet. One of the unique features of Manage Plus is its support for TCP/IPv6. I prefer using Manage Plus rather than Windows Firewall for controlling traffic, because the firewall settings in Manage Plus is simple and easy to use.
