An employee at Microsoft is like a personal computer Case: Microsoft Directory in Internet Explorer 7 Common mistakes that occur when working on the Internet The brain thinks. Your eyes are working. Lead with your hands. Research by R. Kurzweil Typical task for students Get acquainted with the presented examples and get a task for self-fulfillment. Chapter 1. What is the Internet? We recommend that you read the introduction first before reading on for more details. In it we give a general definition of the word Internet. Please note that we do not provide references to the main literature. 1.1. The Internet was opened on January 19, 1989. It was originally called the World Wide Web, then it was called the World W3Web. Now World W2Web is just WWW, that is, World Window-Pop-up-Word-Window. Currently, the WWW is used primarily for inter-corporate, postal, and business communications. Basically, the World WIDE Web is everything that is on the Internet. Here you can find in general terms such concepts as "website", "screen saver", "disk space", "hosting". But these terms only clarify the content of the Internet and the ways (interface) of its use. Now the "content" of the Internet is nothing more than a set of meanings of its individual words (indexing, cataloging, information retrieval, viewers, space, etc.) On January 1, 1994, the world's first Internet domain name (index.rs) appeared, named so by analogy with the World Wide Web - a network of information. More than 10 thousand domains are registered in this domain. As of July 1, 1999, the total number of domains reached 27,000. The further development of the Internet is associated with the emergence of proprietary software for various computers. On August 5, 1995, the world's first public top-level domain name.com was opened, and on January 1, 1998, the world's first business-oriented free zone, name.biz, was opened. In 1999, over 15 thousand such domains were registered in the USA
