Roentgenograms are an indispensable prerequisite for a valid consent to procedures of all kinds and may be decisive in decisions affecting the social and medical welfare of patients. This study shows that three-quarters of the "Informed Consent To Treatment" documents obtained in Germany in October 1983 would have to be considered as invalid, since the information they contain is found to be technically unreliable. A statistically significant correlation is found between the "Informed Consent To Treatment" against women is level of crimes committed against women is
