Q: Append an array of dictionaries to a datetime array in tensorflow I am trying to add an array of dictionaries to an array of datetime64 variables in tensorflow. The array looks like so: `my_array = [{'name': "Bob", 'email': "e@email.com", 'address': "address"}, {'name': "Fred", 'email': "f@email.com", 'address': "address"}, {'name': "John", 'email': "j@email.com", 'address': "address"},]` I want the end result to look like this: `[[{'address': "address", 'name': "Bob", 'email': "e@email.com"}, {'address':`

The goal of Astral Slider is to clear the level as quickly as possible. You have your ship and you shoot the red blocks, avoiding the black blocks by sliding along the track. The faster you can shoot, the more points you'll get. Use the arrow keys to move your ship around and shoot. How to Play Astral Slider: - Take your free spaceship to another galaxy and shoot the blocks before they hit your ship. - Avoid the black blocks as best as you can - Improve your ship's power to increase your speed, but be careful, the faster you go, the higher you are likely to crash. - The number of stars you'll earn for each level depends on your record. - Each level has a boss at the end, try to beat it. FEATURES: - Simple and intuitive gameplay - High-quality graphics - Original soundtrack System Requirements: Compatibility: - VR headset - PC and Mac - Internet connection IF YOU LIKE Astral Slider, please rate it on the store page. It helps us a lot to improve our games. If you like our games, please consider supporting the development with a donation. We work hard to create new games and to improve our current games. Of course, you can keep playing for free. ⚠ Note: Unfortunately, you need to have your head within a VR headset to play Astral Slider, so it is not possible to play this game without VR. This invention relates to apparatus for measuring the amount of food by weight. In restaurants where the serving of food is prepared prior to, or at the time of, the purchase of the food by a customer, the amount of food eaten by a customer is of concern to the restaurant. Because of the expense involved in preparing food, it is important to take the most accurate possible measurement of the amount of food served to a customer and, in most restaurants, the sales clerk who takes the order takes the order by weight rather than by count. In commercial kitchens, where the food is prepared in batches, it is customary to weigh the food as it is prepared. The food is then packaged and sold in individually wrapped portions. The customer then takes the wrapped portions home with him. As the customer unwraps a portion, he or she records the weight. Known scales useful in this context have certain disadvantages. For example, there is the danger of unsanitary handling of food by the user. Scales that weigh food on a belt are
