Diagnostic value of three-dimensional high-definition virtual colonoscopy in relation to conventional colonoscopy with virtual reality (VCE-VR). The objective of this study was to compare the diagnostic yield of conventional colonoscopy (CC) and 3-dimensional high-definition virtual colonoscopy (3D-VCE) in the detection of colonic lesions. Three hundred patients, prospectively enrolled between January 2004 and November 2005, were randomized into 2 groups: Group 1 included 100 patients that had either CC or 3D-VCE between 9:00 and 13:00 h. Utility of mammography screening in the second National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey. We assessed the potential consequences of changes in mammography screening criteria to characterize the population-based effects of rescreening in the second National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (NHANES II). In a survey of 5656 households, women aged 50-69 years were asked about prior screening mammography. Eligibility was based on 2 screening rounds: 1976-1979 (NHANES I) and 1982-1984 (NHANES II). Women considered eligible for rescreening were at least 6 months post-last screening. Overall screening was 4.2%, with 85% screening within 5 years prior to NHANES I and 91% screening within 5 years prior to NHANES II. Among all eligible respondents, rescreening was more likely in community with lower income, lower educational levels, and rural versus urban residence. Mammography screening was consistently carried out in a highly screened population. The feasibility of selective rescreening was demonstrated. Over time, the mode of screening increased, reflected by an increasing fraction of post-NHANES II mammography screeners. CHANNEL);
