seems to take forever, when really it only takes about two years. The divorce process is often very emotional, and couples who meet on the path to divorce often view each other as if they are enemies or engaged in a war — this is understandable, since they are fighting for their lives. If you and your partner are in the middle of a contentious divorce, the last thing you want to do is go to a divorce lawyer and have the person guiding you through it sound like you're two enemies. However, if you've been thinking about seeing a divorce lawyer, it's best to do it before you have the lawyers fighting your battle for you. Good Neighbors As a prospective client, a lawyer is making two promises: that he or she will properly represent you and that he or she will advise you on how to proceed when it's time to file for divorce. The divorce process is a minefield that can wreck the life you've built together. If you don't hire the right lawyer, you could end up seeing money that you think is yours go to your former partner instead of to your children, or you might lose your home, credit cards, and checking account. You're pretty much entering a war.

A friend of yours is most likely going to become your enemy, since you are attacking the person who has been responsible for the financial well-being of your family for years. You don't want to hear your lawyer sound like an enemy, do you? Instead, you would prefer someone who takes on the role of a friend, someone you can trust to be there for you, while also telling you exactly what to do and who to hire for the rest of the process. A good divorce lawyer will be sympathetic and patient, and make you feel like you're surrounded by friends and neighbors. By having the lawyer present and listening and offering advice, you're making your divorce a little more civil. Good lawyers will also help you decide where to file for
