Google's Gmail also has an inbuilt user interface which makes it very easy to keep your emails organized. There are many changes that need to be done to improve Gmail's user interface. In this post we will show you some of the best user interface changes that Gmail should carry out.

- 1. More images in messages Image: Amit Agarwal – Yahoo When we send a message to a friend, all the images need to be downloaded by the recipient as well. Most of the time, a message is accompanied by a couple of images, which make it look busy and cluttered. If you forward this message to someone, the images will appear without the source and will not have a way to access the source.
- 2. Sign in with Gmail With Gmail's Sign in with Gmail, the images you send a message is the only thing that comes inside the recipient's mailbox. Image: StilettoEnterprises The new feature gives a better experience to the users. Instead of going through multiple media and opening the files, you just need to click on the image that you want to send.
- 3. Snooze button This is one of the most useful buttons which you see on email and are often used in Gmail to block your email for a set number of days. Gmail was earlier missing this feature and now it is back and looks great. Image: Isaac Beauchemin When a user receives an email from their Gmail address, they can mark it as read or unread. This is a feature that also needs to be changed in order to make it easier to read the messages. Now that this is implemented in the new version, you can scroll down to see the message and mark it as read.
- 4. Notification about new message Adoption of a new feature that they introduced for a limited time was the reason why they decided to remove this notification from the bottom right corner of the inbox window. Image: Maclean's.com
- 5. Priority Priority helps you send an email that you want to be seen first in inbox. It also comes with some other priority features to distinguish your emails from spam. The New Gmail has added a new feature to prioritize your inbox to enhance the user experience.
- 6. Mark as junk Once you hit the spam button, you will be given the option to mark as 05a79cecff

What's New In Adobe Photoshop Cs 8 Free Download For Windows 10?

Congratulations, Brooklyn Nets. On Friday, you've become the first NBA team to reach 100 wins in a season since the 2004-05 Boston Celtics. So what's next? A few draft picks are at stake, some free agency targets are out there, and your roster still isn't set. But if you're going to win the title, you have to win the offseason first, and you're going to need a host of new players to get there. The summer of 2017 has left many teams with holes on their rosters, some more glaring than others. Here's a look at how the Nets stack up in each of the major offseason avenues.

Sign 'N trade It could be argued that the Nets have the best chance of snagging an All-Star-caliber player via trade right now. Kevin Durant will be traded, and the Nets have the assets -- in terms of either players or picks -- to pull off such a deal. Yes, the No. 2 pick is protected and the Nets can use the No. 15 and No. 37 picks in the 2017 draft to move it to a team that needs a player, like the Suns or Jazz. If it's the Knicks with the No. 2 pick, the Nets have a potentially glaring hole to fill after signing Durant. There are plenty of teams after a star who can offer more money but have better odds of getting their target. Why would the Jazz give up on a losing team that's in contention for a playoff spot when a team in the conference finals is a good stand-in? Why would the Nets be interested in adding Kristaps Porzingis, a team that has its own star to play alongside and would have to give up a massive amount of picks to get him? The Nets will have a better chance to land that star in free agency than in the draft. There is one way the Nets could do this: trade for DeAndre Jordan and have him join Durant, as necessary. Jordan and Durant are to the Clippers what Parker and Leonard are to the Spurs. An acquired player like that would be a perfect fit, because the Nets' trade partners would be forced to surrender the No. 15 and No. 37 picks to get him. The Nets, who play in the same division as both the Clippers and Warriors, will have a shot at doing a similar deal, depending on their draft position. Could they do a similar deal, and then package the No. 15 and
