A fast-paced, richly detailed action game with first person perspective. You play a successful role-player who thinks your train ride home is the end of the story. You may be wrong. As your home begins to realize that you are not coming back, you are thrust into a struggle to survive where you must have what's inside your house and reach your destination before help arrives. Unfortunately, you do not have a full supply of oxygen, and only a few batteries, so you will be forced to get out of doors, through buildings, and even vehicles you can upgrade to lead you to new destinations. If you can keep your head and make it to the end, the lights on the home will turn green, the story will be over, and the ending will be wonderful. No Time for Running NO WAY HOME is a fast-paced action game with first person perspective, where you move in small increments, pressing buttons to input actions that will be instantly modified by the environment. It is designed to be played with only a few controls: • Button for walking • Button for running • Button for jumping • Button for raising and lowering • Button for opening • Button for closing You will use these constantly to avoid obstacles and continue your journey home in the face of natural calamity. You can choose to play on or off, or just choose a preference and let the game play as it will. We designed the game to not offer any pauses, because the game's purpose is to be that precise. However, when your cell phone battery goes down, the game pauses, so that you can find and recharge your phone. Also, when players collect enough Oxygen in a spot or have enough Battery for a group of buttons to be lifted, the game pauses to allow them to choose which door to open next, and press the button for moving on. Also, the game has a complex weather system. There are spots where you can hibernate. During this time you cannot harm enemies, but you also cannot move or press buttons, so you can lie down and sleep, or you can continue walking and pressing buttons to navigate, navigating to avoid passing trains. Also, when you build up enough electricity in the home, if a keypad is touched while an electricity light is on, all lights inside the house turn red, and the electricity will be collected until the end, allowing you to use a bigger home. If you die, do not worry. It will become a ghost

Experience "Get on! Move!"In the future, Cyperpunk games are still very popular. The developers of ElevatorVR wanted to give customers of VR arcades a little ElevatorVR experience to really immerse them into the game world. Control SetupsFirst, the user needs to understand the controller and its layout. The user needs to pick the language of the game. Thereafter, the user takes over the controller from the panel. SetupsThe user's controls are explained on the bottom left: ArrowKeys: The arrow keys can be used to move. They can be pushed in any direction to move closer. If they're held down, the player moves forward.If the game is being played in VR mode, the arrow keys are not active and the player controls the avatar by moving with head movements. RightTrigger: The right trigger is used for targetting and throwing grenades. The user selects targets by looking with the head in the correct direction. Throwing a grenade is done by looking to the left and pressing the right trigger. LeftTrigger: The left trigger is used to throw knives and for opening doors.The left trigger is not used in the VR mode. BottomLeft: A panel to switch between the 3 languages ButtonSetupThe user's settings are explained on the bottom right. The user needs to adjust them and afterwards press the "Save Changes" button. Buttons VR in ElevatorVRThe idea of the controller layout is that a player simply needs to move their head in the direction of their desired movement and push the buttons according to the needs of the game. VR ModeThe buttons can be pushed in any direction to control movement. The player has to adjust his head orientation to the direction of his movement. VR is supported if one of the following things is true:A. A floor button B. The left or right paddle button C. The right trigger button The three button configurations on the left Buttons Available and their default function Justification Buttons are intended to be used as follows. For movement: Arrows (up, down, left, right), Space, M (move backwards), D (move forwards) Target (left and right) Throw grenades (down, left, right) Throw knives (up, down) Crouch (down) Open doors (right) Left trigger
