The New Haven E-33 is the 53rd loco of the New Haven Railroad, built in 1943. The E-33 was equipped with a Caterpillar 415B engine and a 400hp Westinghouse Traction Motors Co. diesel generator. All together the E-33 saw action during World War II. With the war over, it got stuck in a freight depot in East Haven, where it sat until the early 1960s. The E-33 was brought to the New Haven for salvage in 1960. Although the locomotive was repaired, it did not receive any interior alterations. The original number for the E-33 was actually 3-3516, but the New Haven removed the "3-35" to distinguish it from the later E-38. The number was changed to the current "E-33" in 1965. This release of the loco includes an interior and exterior customization. It features an interior layout consisting of a control desk, a walk-around gun platform, running gear compartment, electronics compartment, and much more. A closed cab is included to allow for complete interior customization and control. The E-33 locomotive can be fitted with 4 wheels, two on the power unit and two on the truck. This loco is provided with a standard motion drive, with both the original and non-original gearing included. Key Features: • Operates with both original and non-original E-33 parts. • Uses an original E-33 CMP 3-speed gearset, flywheel, and fuel pump • Comes with the standard E-33 locomotive motion drive • Includes wheel odometer • Includes: driver, fireman and operator's controls, cab • Multiple cab position options included • Includes a manual and remote control option to switch between operator and train controls • Includes an electronic key, just like the original • Scale width can be set from 900 mm or 1,680 mm • Power unit gearbox, drive wheels, and motion drive included • Front buffer included • Exterior is based on a CMP E-35. • Total length is 6 meters • Covered under a 1 year warranty One of the most requested add-on for Train Simulator is now available! TERA is the first and only epic fantasy massively multiplayer online role-playing game (MMORPG) with a visually rich and immersive world where you can carve your own path of greatness. Driven by the story of the Goddess, the world of TERA is one which has been forgotten for thousands of years. It's a world where teratons--manifests of Goddess energy--exist, and the most powerful of them, the tera-stones, grant magnificent powers and abilities to those who can wield them. Nika is an eight-armed Sky Dragon, the fourth of four sons of the Goddess. When he finds his mother, the divine Dierkah, missing in her palace, he sets out on a journey to find her. Along the way he discovers a forgotten world of creatures and cultures unlike any other that man has ever known. In a time when Earth lay defeated by alien invaders, the last of the ancient Greeks waged war on a ruthless alien army--a war that began to shape Earth's destiny. The world Nika now treads was once home to people who valued knowledge, courage, and loyalty. What's new:

is a book of three interconnected short stories, all of which are related to science fiction as defined by the “previously published” PBP criterion. The first of these is a personal story about the author’s experience growing up in an observant Jewish family. The second story, entitled “The Sound of Change,” was one of the finalists for the 2017 Nebula Award for Best Short Story. Like its Nebula and Hugo-nominated predecessor, it was all that and a baguette. The third tale, “The City of Rive’s End,” is a new, original science fiction story. (“Rive’s End” is generally recognized as one of the most distinctive, evocative English toponyms in science fiction. Yes, I get a kick out of my straight-from-the-shoulder geekiness. The story is a homage to such landmarks of the genre as Iain M. Banks’ “Culture.”) This review is for the 2015 agent’s contracted, proofs-only version of the book. I have not reviewed the 2015 version of Dark Heritage, as I did not review Dark Heritage: The Arthur C. Clarke and the Rocky Horror Awards, nor have I reviewed the previously published 2015 version of The City of Rive's End. "The Sound of Change" is based on a real-life incident in which I, as a young girl, witnessed my mother's arrest for gathering with a group of friends to read a children's book, talking about it afterwards, and giving away some of the proceeds to the charity. My mother was one of the people arrested, and she was allowed to go free on a personal recognizance bond. "The Sound of Change" is a story about what happens afterwards, as a group of friends including my mother remains in prison. The prologue is personal. I share my grandfather's immigrant experiences in the U.S. with his relations on both sides of the Atlantic. (Yes, I could use my last name, but it belongs to my mother, who refused to let me use hers for no reason, other than to emphasize her dominance in our household. Wait a minute, I just remembered why. Although "Bendick" spelled backward is "emerinus," and my nickname in the third grade was
