It was built in 1923 on a site in Bastrop, Texas. As there were no explosives or steam available at the time, it was built entirely of concrete and iron. It was maintained until 1989, when it was closed to the public for its last service. In 1998, the Bastrop Chamber of Commerce designated it a historic site. In 2008, it was sold to the current owners and reopened under a different name, the Bastrop Vault. The smuggler was built to store a large amount of World War II-era munitions, to be used to quell a potential civil insurrection. A 9-ton box containing explosives was placed in a hole in the vault's base. The vault was expected to store about 500 tons of munitions for the Army to ship overseas. Iron Mountain originally planned to charge people to tour the vault, but those plans were scuttled. The
