One of the most important features of Photoshop is that it enables you to create graphics effects not readily available from other programs, including special effects, custom screen savers, and even full-blown Hollywood-quality film. Its most common uses are to design and print a variety of graphics products, such as brochures, flyers, invitations, invitations, and business cards. In this chapter, you see how to create the most common graphics effects used for such products, including logos, business card mockups, and print backgrounds. Photos and Frame Graphics The following steps walk you through creating a simple logo that uses Photoshop. You start with a simple logo template that contains an eight-by-eight-inch (20-by-20-cm) frame around a photo. You then create the image for the frame, add a new layer that has an image, and merge the layer into the template. You can repeat these steps as many times as needed to make a logo that has several photos inside the frame. 1. Choose File⇒New to create a new file. 2. Open the AIMLS-8004_Logo.psd file found in the Chapter 3 folder. This file contains a template frame with an 8-by-8-inch (20-by-20-cm) black frame surrounding an image file (see Figure 5-1). Figure 5-1: A simple logo template frame with a photo. When you create a graphics file, it should not be opened in the same application where it's going to be printed. The template is a 12-by-12-inch (30.5-by-30.5-cm) file that consists of several different layers of an eight-by-eight-inch (20-by-20-cm) frame. The layers include a black frame, a white frame, an image, and a white background. 3. Select the Rectangular Marquee tool in the Tools palette. When you select the Rectangular Marquee tool, you want to make a selection that is roughly eight times wider than the image in order to create a perfect eight-by-eight-inch (20-by-20-cm) frame around the image. After making the initial selection, choose Edit⇒Ruler to make the frame the right size. 4. Zoom in to 100 percent so you can view the selection better.

The Path tool is a tool used to draw over an image using a set of lines, shapes, or polygons. This tool is used to do various tasks, from filling areas and creating text to creating illustrations or lettering. The Pen Tool lets you create free-hand lines, curves, and shapes that are also useful for creating symbols or illustrations. The Healing Brush is an easy way to remove dust, dirt, and scratches from an image or content. The Spot Healing Brush is used for removing an object or area of an image that is highlighted in a selection or a selection mask. The Type Tool can be used to define typographic characters such as numbers and text. There are additional features in Photoshop which are less commonly used, and include such things as paint buckets and the Magic Wand. Photoshop brushes Brushes are one of the most popular tools in Photoshop. They can be used for various effects, including compositing, painting, erasing and retouching images. The Brush panel provides information about all brushes used with Photoshop. In order to use any of these brushes, click the brush icon at the top of the Brush panel. A white brush preview area will appear, along with a small square inside of which is the Brush Tool. See the following video for an example of the Brush Tool in use: Brushes do not have to be square in shape; they can be any shape, including a circle or elliptical brush. To create a brush, click the Brush Tool in the Toolbox, which is the tool used to select brushes. The Brush Tool is also one of the options found in the Options bar at the top of the Photoshop window. If you do not see a Brush Tool, press CTRL (Windows) or CMD (Macintosh) to make it visible. When the Brush Tool is selected, a cursor for the brush is displayed, as shown in the next figure. Click and drag within the Brush panel to define the brush. As you drag, a color gradient fills the shape that represents the brush. You can see the difference between a square brush and a circle brush in the next figure. Figure 1 - Using the Brush Tool with a square brush Figure 2 - Using the Brush Tool with a circle brush See the next figure for an example of the use of a brush to outline an image and then fill it with a color. A New Take on Google Search is on the Way In a letter dated September 15, 2019, the United States Patent and Trademark Office published the final claim change in Google's new pledge. As quoted from the public record, the finalized claim is now… "The computer-implemented method for searching a content object containing multimedia data, comprising the steps of retrieving a data structure that represents metadata associated with content contained within a content object; and using metadata associated with the content object and metadata stored in the data structure to generate a query for a search engine." It is interesting to note that in recent years, the patent office has issued a lot of patent coverage data for search engines. Importance of Google's New Search Google has been boasting for years about its semantic web of information. But most recent patent evidence comes off as a more sensible approach than in the past. Whereas in the past, Google was merely a search engine which enables searchers to quickly find information, the new system being built by Google is one that generates information. The patents are extensive and powerful, and they will certainly continue to play a major role in search engine development. A New Light on the Future of SEO We're seeing the final claim changes filed by Google now being published as public records. It's exciting to see the increased details on Google Search and other patent filings to come. It does seem as if Google is on the cusp of a much more powerful search engine than the one we see today. But we're also being shown the future, too. In all likelihood, we're going to see a combination of patent data becoming increasingly available, and, at the same time, non-patent systems like extended snippets, metadata, and devices delivering search ads to popular and relevant pages.# from def parse_requirements(strs): lines = [x.strip() for x in strs.splitlines()] return [optparse.OptionParser(description=x, usage=x).parse_args(lines) for x in lines] def setup_requirements(requirements
