Intercellular adhesion molecules ICAM-1 and LFA-3 are up-regulated in activated human polymorphonuclear leukocytes. A comparison with LFA-1. Activated polymorphonuclear leukocytes (PMN) show a 5-fold increase of cell surface expression of ICAM-1. This activation-induced change in ICAM-1 expression was found to be time-dependent and reversible upon deactivation. To follow the alteration of ICAM-1, LFA-3 and LFA-1 cell surface expression in activated PMN, we measured the cytoadherence of PMN to adhesion molecules-coated microtiter plates as well as the immunoprecipitation of these molecules from the leukocyte lysates. No difference in ICAM-1 cell surface expression could be found in resting and lipopolysaccharide (LPS)-activated PMN, whereas a significant (5-fold) increase of ICAM-1 was measured in fMLP-activated PMN. Immunoprecipitation of ICAM-1 showed a similar time-dependent increase in all experiments, but was lower in resting PMN than in activated PMN. LFA-3 is expressed in resting PMN but was undetectable in activated PMN. No change in LFA-3 cell surface expression was detected in any experimental condition. Immunoprecipitation of LFA-3 showed a reversible loss of LFA-3 in LPS-activated PMN. Analysis of LFA-1 by immunoprecipitation and immunofluorescence staining of cells in culture showed that cell surface expression of this molecule also increases after activation with fMLP, but this increase was considerably slower than the one observed for ICAM-1 and LFA-3. These data indicate that the differences in ICAM-1 cell surface expression in resting and activated PMN are at least partly due to the increase of ICAM-1 synthesis. Activation of PMN also causes an increase in expression of LFA-3 and LFA-1, but to a lesser extent than ICAM-1. List of Indian bread
