The vertical distribution of Cr(V) in six drinking water wells along the two tributaries of the Monongahela River (West Virginia, USA) and one surface water has been studied. The pH, Fe(II), Cr(III), Al, Ca, Mg and Ti were measured. The samples were pre-filtered and filtered using a miniconcentric filter column, and both the water and the filter were sent to XRF and magnetic susceptibility analysis, XRF analysis of the filtered samples, XRF and magnetic susceptibility of the unfiltered samples, and chemical speciation by X-ray absorption fine structure (XAFS). The samples were also analyzed with the magnetometer to determine magnetic susceptibility. XRF analysis revealed the distribution of Cr(III), Fe, Al, Mg and Ti, whereas the speciation was not as complete. The Cr(V) fraction of the water samples was measured by XRF and it was found to be the predominant form (up to 96%) within the wells. Correlation analysis showed a significant relationship between the pH and the potential impact ion species Fe(II), Fe(III) and Al, whereas no significant relationship was found between the chromium distribution and the concentration of the potential impact ion species Fe(II), Fe(III) and Al. Multi-slice CT imaging and magnetic resonance (MR) imaging in the diagnosis of pulmonary metastases in breast cancer. Our purpose was to determine whether multi-slice CT and MR imaging can be used to distinguish metastatic from non-metastatic pulmonary nodules in patients with breast cancer. We used multi-slice CT and MR imaging to determine the presence or absence of pulmonary metastases in 35 women with breast cancer. All patients underwent surgically- or histologically-proven pulmonary resections.

Correlations between the CT and MR imaging findings and histologic findings were evaluated with a Fisher's exact test. Multi-slice CT and MR imaging correctly identified 24 (69%) of 35 metastatic lung lesions and correctly predicted 26 (74%) of 35 non-metast
