Primary neuroendocrine tumours of the small intestine are characterised by a slow and progressive clinical course and an unfavourable prognosis. The management of these tumours is controversial. The authors report their experience with 22 patients (14 male and 8 female) with well-differentiated primary neuroendocrine tumours of the small intestine treated at the University of Udine from 1970 to 1993. Twenty-two cases of well-differentiated intestinal neuroendocrine tumours are reported in 20 patients (18 male and 2 female). Eleven patients were younger than 20 years (55%). Symptoms and signs included a palpable abdominal mass in 7 cases, tenesmus in 9 cases and diarrhea in 8 cases. One patient was asymptomatic and diagnosed by chance at the time of abdominal imaging (CT scan) for evaluation of an unknown right renal mass. The gastrointestinal tract was the primary site in all cases. Endoscopy and endoscopic biopsy were performed in all patients. The diagnosis was confirmed in all cases. The treatment was surgical in all cases (11 total excision, 5 partial excision, 6 biopsy only). All patients, however, underwent surgical treatment following the diagnosis of malignant disease. The follow-up showed no metastases at the time of diagnosis. Recurrence was observed in 5 patients (31%). At the time of last evaluation, 3 of these patients are alive and disease-free (11.5 +/- 10 months). The other 2 patients died from metastatic disease (14 months). Five of 10 patients died because of their disease (45%). Primary intestinal neuroendocrine tumours are characterized by a slow and progressive clinical course. After surgical treatment, the prognosis is poor in the absence of metastatic disease at diagnosis. Total surgical resection followed by 5-FU should be considered the treatment of choice. Interleukin-2: a novel target for therapy of cancer.
