The first American to fly solo across the Atlantic Ocean has been hailed a "real pioneer" for being the first to break the Atlantic record. Airline pilot Mike Melvill made the crossing of the 3,750 mile Atlantic Ocean in a 1930s Grumman Tigercat single-engine plane. He was not only the first to fly solo, he was also the first to fly over both the Atlantic and the Americas. He completed the flight across the Atlantic Ocean on May 6, 1939. In fact, Melvill is the world's first solo pilot to do so. On May 4, 1927, Antoine de Saint-Exupery flew solo across the Mediterranean Sea. "Melvill goes down in history as a real pioneer as the first to cross the Atlantic solo," said Walter O'Malley, 70. His uncle, baseball legend Jackie O'Malley, was Mike Melvill's coach when he was a kid, it was like the first time I'd ever seen a plane. He was kind of a Johnny Appleseed of aviation, flying across the world." Shortly after arriving in New York, Melvill was mobbed by fans. A helicopter found him flying through the streets of his hometown. Earlier this year, Melvill brought his plane back to New York City for an exhibition along Broadway. For nearly two decades, Melvill kept the poodle he brought with him on the Atlantic crossing. Today it's housed in a museum next to the plane. Melvill logged more than

Planetary Control is an interactive board game that can be played by 2-4 people with 2-6 players per game. The game is about exploring the planets of the outer solar system and trying to make sure that we humans don't succeed where the Children of the Sun did. When the Children of the Sun started a civilization on the planet Uranus, they planned to create a new sun out of that planet. That plan failed, and every planet in our solar system has now a sun of their own. Planetary Control is played over an ante game. You have to work together to explore the planets, collect resources and build buildings. The plan is to create a farm in your solar system and to build a space ship. The goal is to be the first player to accomplish those tasks. One player takes control of all the other players. The game consists of four rounds. In each round you're trying to do something. Your main objective is to get three or more of your players to control one planet. You can also win by securing three or more of the five planets. The planets are classified in five different groups. Each group contains one planet that you can win each round. You can collect resources and build buildings for each planet, but you have only one building at the end of each round. You can only plan your own moves. Because you can only see what other players have done so far, this is a difficult game to plan. Good players can really exploit a lack of planning here. You'll have to plan, adapt and improvise. In one scenario you're a particularly smart player. You know exactly what your opponents want, because they allowed you to collect a blueprint of their strategy. Because of that, you will have an edge over all other players. If you are someone who likes a tactical strategy game then this is the game for you! If really liked this game. It was fun. It has a lot of things you don't typically see in other games. It does seem to be a bit complex, but I like that." Board Game Star "Planetary Control was definitely a lot of fun! I like games that involve strateg

What's new in Monster Prom 2: Monster Camp:

by FG Productions Newly recorded jazz band version from 2014 Groningen Public Library is presenting Richard Egge's most recent opera "De Onzige Verteller" For several years, composer Richard Egge has worked with classical music composer or pianist Pierre Mertens as a composing team. Constrained to find new ways of adding jazz elements to his chamber compositions, he has turned to recordings of the trio La Maison Bleu in Paris where bassist Ugo Tura has admired him since he first began working with jazz in the early 1990s. (It was Ugo Tura, born in 1982, who played for Egge as a guest soloist at the Koninklijke Vlaamse Muziekgeselschap.) Initially Egge wanted to use a piece from one of his greatest influences, Ferdinand Servaes (1927-1999). This composition, an impressionistic portrait of a woman waiting for a man, ended up with the text "Lied van Mette". The song's opening lines and the lyrics read: "The wind is rocking the boat". In some musical treatments of Egge's composition such as Nederlandse vreemdeling ("a composition commissioned for the Kongsintag in 2005) this woman is told there is a man whose coming she is impatiently waiting for, but the artist is also telling us this same man will never come. And there is something that settles into this woman's desire and that becomes the source for her longing. It is not love, but a desire for the meeting. [...]. A love as you might call it, if you were to want to make use of a Biblical word." The music, derived from a work written for a female vocalist by the Dutch organist Lambert van Assche, has a slow tempo. A lovely melody, repeated by the soprano(s) throughout the piece. Another, quicker passage is back and forth between the melody and the gospel tenor solo. Egge's music possess a rich expression and hints of feeling, with a blues or soul feeling to it. After listening to recordings of artists he likes in the French jazz scene from the early 1990s on, Egge was impressed by the finesse, emotion and rhythmic power of the trio this would give him complete fr
