Course Managers Handbook of The Little Brown Handbook 12th EditionÂ .When you think about what makes a sustainable home, it's easy to imagine that you need to make some big, sweeping changes to your life. The good news is that, as owner of your home, you can make many individual decisions that will benefit your family and the environment over the long term. Here are just a few of the biggest steps you can take today. 1. Include your children in the home-making process If you want to instill in your children a love of sustainable practices, you can't leave this important step to your kids, too. From planning out what they might want to include in their room to encouraging them to help plan out weekly meals, you can educate your children from an early age about using sustainable practices. 2. Repair what you can, rather than replacing a worn out appliance There's a lot of fear surrounding the idea of repairing instead of buying a new appliance. But if you can fix your problems, you not only save money and make your home more environmentally friendly, you can be more creative in the process. When looking at ways to make your home greener, repair is often a better option because it typically doesn't require the same energy and resources to make and transport. 3. Cook meals in bulk From making your own dressings, soups and sauces to planning a weekly menu to quickly throw together from items in your fridge and freezer, cooking meals in bulk can be both a tasty and an affordable option. Because you are able to store the ingredients in the freezer and the produce in your fridge, it allows you to stock up on items you may not have planned for and make those delicious dishes at your own convenience. 4. Shop the sales There's nothing better than grabbing a bargain, right? Although buying what's on sale isn't always a bad idea, there are ways to shop it that will help you save money and time in the long run. Whether you're looking for a piece of furniture that has never been used or an item for your home décor,
