A 65-year-old man was referred to our department for mitral valve endocarditis following aortic valve replacement 2 months earlier. A native valve endocarditis was indicated by high fever and aortic regurgitation due to endocarditis of the native aortic valve. Two recurrences of a native valve endocarditis have occurred. Mitral valve prosthesis endocarditis was indicated by mitral regurgitation due to endocarditis of the prosthetic mitral valve. Two recurrences of prosthetic valve endocarditis have occurred. The initial 4 cases of native valve endocarditis involved male patients, and all of the patients were younger than 60 years. The 2 other patients are aged 78 and 84 years. Prosthetic valve endocarditis occurred in 2 men and 1 woman. Four patients underwent a repeat operation; 2 were treated conservatively, and two patients underwent surgery. The factors that predispose the elderly to endocarditis are the altered immunologic status and higher incidence of other medical problems. These patients have much higher morbidity and mortality rates.Reviews BestCouponSites says: This is the best choice to provide the best online service to the people. ### What's New in the?

Prompt settlement of a dispute can be a good sign. Image: CC/Andrew Cowie/Flickr For people who have been waiting to get the results of a diagnostic test, a quick settlement with a doctor can be an indicator that the results are negative, says a study published this week in JAMA Psychiatry. "The news of a negative test result may be disappointing, but the news of a quick, easy, and open-ended settlement with a health professional may be a better outcome," write the authors of the study, led by Suzanne Weiss, M.D., Ph.D., at Columbia University, in New York. "If the patient had enough information and time, might their news of a quick settlement be true positive?" In an effort to examine this possibility, the researchers conducted a study of 1,211 adults between the ages of 18 and 65 who were experiencing a common type of physical symptoms. They were asked about their experiences with their doctors, and if they had reached any type of settlement or resolution with them. The results suggested that people who had positive results were more likely to have reached an agreement than were those who had negative results, and they also found that people who were denied a diagnosis were more likely to seek a settlement than those who were given a diagnosis. The researchers' biggest takeaway, however, is that many patients who did not reach settlements with doctors or pharmacists did not know enough to push. "Patients who did not receive a definitive diagnosis are less empowered to demand the resources they need to meet their health care needs," the researchers write. "In fact, many patients may not know that they can demand a definitive health professional's response to a symptom or condition." This is the first study that attempts to examine the types of settlements patients reach with health care providers. Although patients can seek a settlement in a variety of ways, including in small claims court, the most common situation is when someone receives a bill for medical services or medication and then tries to negotiate a lower amount. "The most common form of settlement we see for people in this study is a payment of a partial, or even a full amount billed," says Weiss. "The patient may have paid 50% to 75% of what was billed or the bill may have been 'full payment pending receipt of test results.'" Another type of
