To examine the effects of morphine on mitochondrial function in the rat central nervous system (CNS), we compared mitochondrial function, ATP-formation capacity, and rates of [14C]beta-hydroxybutyrate production between morphine-naive and morphine-dependent Lewis rats. Brain mitochondria from morphine-naive rats had lower rates of O2 uptake and ATP-formation capacity and higher rates of [14C]beta-hydroxybutyrate production than those from morphine-dependent rats. Mitochondrial enzyme activities were similar between the two groups of rats. To investigate the basis for altered mitochondrial function in morphine-naive rats, we compared glucose utilization (using [3H]2-deoxyglucose) and the cytochrome oxidase (using cytochrome c) distribution in the dorsolateral striatum and hippocampus of morphine-naive rats and morphine-dependent rats. Glucose utilization was slightly, but significantly, decreased in morphine-naive rats. Cytochrome oxidase activity was significantly increased in the dorsolateral striatum and hippocampus of morphine-naive rats. These data suggest that there is decreased function of some, but not all, brain cell types in morphine-naive rats. Chronic morphine administration leads to increased cytochrome oxidase activity in striatal and hippocampal neurons.Q: VS Express 2010 Productivity Power Tools 2013 I have VS2010 but haven't installed any extensions.
