Q: How can you determine the message queued for your class with a WCF service? On my app I have a simple WCF Service in which I am using a serializer to populate a List or Dictionary. I use an interceptor to set the required headers. I can see from the message headers the required information being sent but is there a way I can see what each message has been queued for or find out where it failed. I have tried to use the 'Exception' attached to each message and for the majority of messages the message details are there and the error string is present. However with one message the exception message is null.

A: Check your diagnostics logs. You should find this there.

A novel ABC-type Na+/H+ antiporter from Halobacterium halobium. A 2-kilobase (kb) element of the Hhal chromosomal DNA of Halobacterium halobium has been sequenced and analyzed. This element, which contains an ABC-type Na(+)/H(+) antiporter gene (nhaA), its flanking nucleotide sequences, and 16 nucleotides of its 5'-terminal untranslated region, is followed by the nhaB gene for the polypeptide chain of the ATP-binding component of the Na(+)/H(+) antiporter and a putative nhaC gene for the polypeptide chain of an integral membrane protein. On the basis of its amino acid sequence, the Na(+)/H(+) antiporter of H. halobium and an extremely divergent homolog from Halobacterium cutirubrum seem to belong to a distinct group of ABC-type transport systems. "Cash is king." This is something Americans hear all the time, especially when making a large purchase. There are plenty of different reasons that cash is king. The most obvious is that it saves time and saves us money. Studies show that consumers save between $136 and $283 per person per year by switching to debit cards. Cash is also the easiest and safest way to make purchases. We carry approximately $
